Q1	In the troubled lands of Aragona, a revolutionary force, Aragona Panthers, fighting for social equality has been trying to overthrow the government and establish a new government. The struggle turned violent, and in order to pressurize the government, the revolutionaries took ten American missionaries as hostage. They were kept in torturous conditions which resulted into the death of four of them. Two months later Aragona Panthers succeeded in establishing a government in Aragona. Enraged, the USA filed a complaint to the ICJ claiming that Aragona has committed a wrongful act. The newly formed government argued that the incident occurred when the revolutionary force was not in power and therefore the act of the members of the force cannot be imputed to the State of Aragona, and thus to its newly formed government.
